

About the Authors

Anthony Hoskin is an assistant professor of criminology at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in Odessa, Texas. He earned his PhD in sociology in 1999 at the State University of New York at Albany. His research has focused on the two specific areas: the relationship between firearm availability and violence, and the link between various dimensions of social stratification and deviance as interpreted by general strain theory. He and his colleagues have published research articles in prestigious journals such as Criminology and Justice Quarterly.

David C. May is a Professor and Kentucky Center for School Safety Research Fellow in the Department of Criminal Justice at Eastern Kentucky University. He has published numerous articles in the areas of responses to school violence, perceptions of the severity of correctional and possession among male delinquents, and a book on perceptions of the punitiveness of prison and working on several articles related to the aforementioned topics.

Daniel Nehring is Lecturer in Sociology (equivalent to Assistant Professor) at Middlesex University in London. His research focuses on transformations of intimate citizenship and personal life in the context of rapid social change and globalisation. He has conducted extensive fieldwork in Mexico and is currently developing a new research project on issues of transnational dating and marriage in China.

Daniel Phillips is Associate Professor of Sociology and Criminal Justice and Chair, Social Sciences Division, Lindsey Wilson College in Columbia, Kentucky. For the last 5 years, he has served as a book and journal editor for criminal justice issues. His most recent books are Mental Health Issues in the Criminal Justice System and Probation and Parole: Current Issues. He is the past editor of the International Journal of Sociological Research. He has been a Special Editor for 5 issues of the Journal of Offender Rehabilitation.

Rick Ruddell, the Law Foundation of Saskatchewan Chair in Police Studies, joined the Department of Justice Studies at the University of Regina in September, 2010. Prior to this appointment he served as Director of Operational Research with the Correctional Service of Canada, and held faculty positions at Eastern Kentucky University and the California State University, Chico. A graduate of the Ph.D. program in Criminology and Criminal Justice at the University of Missouri – St. Louis, Dr. Ruddell's research has focused upon policing, criminal justice policy, and juvenile justice.