

About the Authors

Courtney Barnicoat is a graduate student of sociology at Middle Tennessee State University, though temporarily on leave. Barnicoat received her undergraduate degree from Eastern Kentucky University where she presented The Motherhood Wage Gap at the 19th Annual National McNair Research Conference, as well as at the 74th Annual Meeting of the Southern Sociological Societies. She plans to continue her graduate study in sociology very soon.

Craig J. Forsyth is Professor and the Head of the Department of Criminal Justice and Professor of Sociology at the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. He received his Ph.D. from Louisiana State University in 1983. He is the author of over 160 journal articles, books and book chapters. His principal research interests are in the areas of deviance and crime.

York A. Forsyth has a degree in management information systems. He is currently a graduate student in Political Science at the University of New Orleans. He is experienced in handling and merging large data sets. He has published articles on piracy and juvenile delinquency.

John F. Frana is a PhD student of Applied Sociology at the University of Louisville. Having spent numerous years of incarceration he brings a unique and refreshing perspective to the studies of sociology and criminology. His research interests include desistance from criminal behavior, alternatives to incarceration, and employment opportunities of former prisoners. Direct all correspondence to jffran01@cardmail.louisville.edu

Brittney M. Howell is adjunct faculty at Northern Kentucky University and Gateway Community and Technical College. She received her B.S. from Central Michigan University and her M.A. from the University of Cincinnati, receiving training in archaeology, cultural, and biological anthropology. She is currently a doctoral student of biocultural anthropology and research assistant of behavioral science at the University of Kentucky. Her research interests include nutritional anthropology, the relationship between poverty and nutrition, Appalachia, Alaska Native health, and indigenous identities. She has recently published book chapters in 21st Century Anthropology: A Reference Handbook and Textbook of Child Global Health; published journal articles in American Journal of Health Behavior, Family and Community Health, and Infants and Young Children; and written book reviews for the Oral History Review.

Douglas William Hume is an Assistant Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Applied Environmental Anthropology Research Group at Northern Kentucky University. His research interests include applied cultural, ecological/environmental, and linguistic/cognitive anthropology; anthropological methods and theory; agriculture, conservation, and ritual; behavior and folk knowledge; race, gender, and sexuality; technology and pedagogy; Belize, California, Kentucky, Madagascar, and the Internet.

Matthew Irvin is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Eastern Kentucky University since 2007. He teaches classes in the Sociology of Mass Media, Symbolic Interactionism, and Formal Organizations. His current research focuses on labor market and organizational inequality, media ownership, and the social construction of ideology in new media. His most recent work, with Kevin Stainback in the journal Social Science Research, "Workplace racial composition, perceived discrimination, and organizational attachment" was published in December 2011.

Austin J. Matthews is an assistant professor and the Sociology program director at Eastern Kentucky University. He also holds affiliated faculty status in the Women's and Gender Studies program. He has extensively studied intimate partner violence among men who have sex with men, examining correlates of and contributing factors to both perpetration and victimization. More recently, Dr. Matthews' research has focused on attitudes toward same-sex marriage, the mental health of men who have sex with men, and perceptions of national identity among sexual minorities.

Stephanie McSpirit is a professor of sociology at Eastern Kentucky University, where she has been a faculty member since 1995. McSpirit teaches classes in statistics, introductory sociology, environmental sociology, animal studies, and community-based research methods. Her most recent work is the co-edited volume, Confronting Environmental Crisis in Appalachia and the South: University and Community Partnerships, through the University Press of Kentucky, due to be out in the summer of 2012. McSpirit is also the guest editor of the next special issue of KJAS on "nature, the environment and conservation" also due out in the summer of 2012.

Sarah V. McVey is a doctoral student in Political Science at Western Michigan University. Prior to attending Western Michigan, she earned a MA in Political Science from Wayne State University and a BA in Sociology at Eastern Kentucky University. She is the author of Race, Gender, and the Modern White Supremacy Movement: The Intersection of "Isms" and Organized Racist Groups and has presented research concerning intimate partner violence and sexual minorities.

Susan Patterson is an Assistant Professor of Human Services and Counseling at Lindsey Wilson College's School of Professional Counseling in Columbia, Kentucky. As a Licensed Professional Clinical Counselor with over two decades of experience in mental health and substance abuse treatment, her interests are varied, including clinical supervision; suicide prevention; and counseling survivors of suicide. She is currently President-Elect of the Kentucky Counseling Association, has been a frequent presenter at state conferences, and desires to publish in academic journals as well as the popular press.