

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Lisa Conley is a PhD Candidate in the Department of Sociology at the University of Kentucky and received her master's degree in Criminal Justice at Eastern Kentucky University. Her research and teaching combines the focus areas of Appalachian studies, food-ways, gender, environmental justice, and sustainability. Her dissertation examines the motivations of home food preservation practitioners in KY, focusing on the intersections of sustainability and gender within the construction of traditional food practices. She hopes to incorporate service-learning and documentary film-making into her courses and future research projects.

Alicia Fisher received her MA in Sociology from the University of Kentucky in the spring 2012. As part of her project, she submitted a policy paper to the Kentucky Department of Agriculture titled "How Proud is Kentucky Food? Local Food Meanings and Practices for Stakeholders." Her research was supported by the Department of Sociology University of Kentucky Beers Summer Fellowship, the Rural Sociological Society Master's Thesis Award, and an internship at the Kentucky Department of Agriculture. Continuing on with the PhD, Alicia plans to explore agricultural policy, standards and regulation, and marketing and knowledge through local food hubs, sustainability certification, and branding campaigns.

Benjamin Z. Freed is an Assistant Professor and the Anthropology Program Coordinator at Eastern Kentucky University. He teaches courses in biological anthropology, human evolution, quantitative methods, human osteology, primate ecology and sociality, and primate conservation. His primary research interests include primate feeding and ranging behavior, social organization and structure, evolution, political ecology, and ethnoprimateology. Current research themes involve the study of species interactions among primates in Madagascar, the effects of habitat fragmentation on nonhuman primate behavior and ecology, and the interaction of humans with neighboring wildlife.

Julie Sharp is an adjunct professor for the Recreation and Park Administration Department at Eastern Kentucky University. She has spent time as a research assistant at the University of Georgia and as an employee of the National Park Service at Shenandoah, Grand Teton and for the Intermountain Regional Office in Denver Colorado.

Shaunna Scott is the Director of Graduates Studies in Sociology at the University of Kentucky.

Ryan Sharp is an assistant professor in the Recreation and Park Administration Department at Eastern Kentucky University. He earned his Ph.D. From the University of Georgia in Forestry with and emphasis in Natural Resource Recreation and Tourism. His degree work along with his time working for the National Park Service guides his teaching and research efforts that focus on resource recreation management, parks and protected area management, human dimensions of natural resources and effectiveness of educational programs/interpretation

Mary V. Sheldon is a certified dental ceramist with 28 years of experience. She is currently a senior non-traditional student obtaining her undergraduate degree in Sociology at Eastern Kentucky University. She plans to continue her education with a graduate degree in Sociology at the University of Kentucky. Her area of focus is environmental sociology and ecofeminism.

Mary V. Sheldon is a certified dental ceramist with 28 years of experience. She is currently a senior non-traditional student obtaining her undergraduate degree in Sociology at Eastern Kentucky University. She plans to continue her education with a graduate degree in Sociology at the University of Kentucky. Her area of focus is environmental sociology and ecofeminism.

Dan Shope is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Sociology at Shawnee State University located in Portsmouth, Ohio. His research interests include Environmental Sociology, Medical Sociology, Race, Class, and Gender, Urban Sociology, Sociology of Education, Sociology of Sport, Popular Culture, Sociology of Marriage and the Family, Sociology of Music, and Appalachian Studies. He is currently working on a book manuscript exploring the lives of deindustrialized glass workers in Huntington, West Virginia for The Edwin Mellen Press. He recently published an article in The Journal of Kentucky Studies that explored methods of teaching Race Formation Theory to Introduction to Sociology students. Dr. Shope has also taught sociology courses at Murray State University, Bowling Green State University, Marshall University, and Morehead State University.

Matisa Wilbon is an Associate Professor in the Department of Psychology/Sociology/Criminal Justice Studies at Bellarmine University. She teaches introductory and upper level courses centered on her research interests including: crime and the media, juvenile delinquency, and structural inequality. In addition to teaching, Dr. Wilbon is an active researcher publishing in the areas of drug and alcohol use/abuse and adolescent sexual behavior. Additionally, Dr. Wilbon conducts evaluation research with the Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation (PIRE), a national research firm, examining state level prevention/intervention infrastructure and drug and alcohol programming and best practices. Dr. Wilbon earned her B.A. in Anthropology/Sociology from Centre College from which she was selected as this year's Distinguished Young Alumnus. She received her Masters and Doctorate degrees in Sociology from The Ohio State University. .