

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Caroline E. Reid PhD, MSW is Professor at Eastern Kentucky University. She is a social worker and teacher. Her research focuses on social work, addictions, interpersonal violence, and social and economic justice in Appalachia.

Jennifer R. Wies, PhD, is Professor and Chair at Ball State University. She co-edited Applying Anthropology to Gender-Based Violence (2015, Rowman and Littlefield) and Anthropology at the Front Lines of Gender-Based Violence (2011, Vanderbilt University Press). She is an applied medical anthropologist dedicated to teaching and practicing anthropology. Her research focuses on structures of violence as experienced and expressed by local populations in the United States, including victims of gender-based violence, families affected by incarceration, people with HIV/AIDS, and first-generation college women. Her recent work theorizes the legacies of neoliberal economic reforms in Appalachian Kentucky.

David C. May is a Professor in the Department of Sociology at Mississippi State University. David has authored or coauthored six books and over 80 scholarly articles and book chapters around his research interests of fear of crime, school safety, cyber violence, corrections, military sociology, and human robot interaction.

Brianna Wright is a Master's student in Sociology at Mississippi State University. Her research interests include: masculinity, school violence, youth, and social media.