

About the Authors

Jack (Trey) Allen is a first-year PhD student and Graduate Assistant (Instructor) at the University of Louisville and currently teaches sections SOC 210 Race in the U.S. He holds a Master of Arts in sociology from the University of Louisville and a Bachelor of Arts in sociology from Asbury University. His current research focuses on boundary-work among religious Muslims and how meaning is constructed around these boundaries. His research interests include race, stigma, and masculinities. Trey is the current president of the University of Louisville Sociology Graduate Student Association.

Laura Bronte Murrell is alumna of Northern Kentucky University, where she studied anthropology and geography. Her research interests consist of cultural anthropology and environmental anthropology, with regional focuses in Belize and the United States

Douglas William Hume is an Associate Professor of Anthropology, Chair of the Sociology, Anthropology, and Philosophy Department, and Director of the Center for Applied Anthropology at Northern Kentucky University. His research interests include: applied cultural (cognitive/environmental) anthropology; anthropological methods and theory; agriculture, conservation, and ritual; behavior and folk knowledge; technology and pedagogy; Belize, Internet, Madagascar, and the United States.

Dr. Joshua J. Turner is a research associate at the National Strategic Planning and Analysis Research Center at Mississippi State University. His research interests include demography, economic development, survey design, and health and aging. Dr. Turner received his PhD from Mississippi State University.

Dr. Brooks has taught for Austin Peay State University for the past seven years. He recently accepted a sociology faculty position for BYU-Idaho. His research interests include Southern United States demographic and economic trends and spatial analysis.

Lara Watkins is an applied medical anthropologist and teaches anthropology at Bridgewater State University. Her work in both academia and industry has focused on improving access to health and education for underserved populations within the United States. A common thread throughout her research, teaching, and consulting is strengthening well-being through addressing the social determinants of health.

Heidi Williams studies family sociology and demography. She currently serves as an instructor in the Department of Sociology at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Robin S. Högnäs, PhD, is a researcher at the Centre for Health Equity Studies with the Department of Public Health Sciences at Stockholm University, 160 Sveavägen, Sveaplan SE-106 91 Stockholm, Sweden. Dr. Högnäs research areas are family demography and social epidemiology.

A special thanks is extended to Dr. James N. Camp and Dr. Amy B. Thistlethwaite, from the Department of Sociology and Criminal Justice at Thomas More College for providing the cover design.